

SPICY SEASON

An exotic adventure of grand couture, a new flavour, a new taste. The Spices of the souk can change a look into an ethnic parade of glamorous natural hues. From turmeric to cinnamon, cayenne to cardamom, the Middle East has it covered with colour trends coming from the hyper natural spices found at a souk.

To begin, Burberry reflects Resene's High Noon used in this tribal looking embellished coat. With hints of aboriginal design, the colour speaks volumes of natural tone and simple living. It's luxurious, and even with the addition of the applique; the garment remains effortless and chic.

Dolce and Gabbana pumps up the volume in a red-hot Resene Shiraz coloured gown that scorches the runway as the model struts by. Spicing up the catwalk, this dress looks as if it could burn right through the floor. The beading does well to break up the colour and gives it a depth that is relevant to the spicy chilly it references.

And in following with the taste of the spicy, Jil Sander presents us with a mustard seed coloured dress in the style of Resene Galliano.

The colour is bright and bold with nothing fancy. You know what you're getting and there's no hiding that. For a more palatable flavour, bold and nutty seems to be a hit with Marc Jacobs, who showed a saffron coloured cardigan similar to that of Resene's Lonestar. The cardigan is warm and inviting, supports the body and exudes comfort.

Reed Krakoff is drawn to a more earthy tone with this sage looking vest and skirt pair. Resene shows this deep sage green in Resene Kermadec, which is almost identical to fresh ground sage leaves. Savoury in taste, the look emulates that serious attitude that sage carried and translates it into the world of fashion.

And to finish the tasting, your essential spice, black pepper. Son Jungwan showed this gorgeous billowing gown that enhances the beauty of women, just as pepper enhances the taste of food.

Resene matches this with Stonehenge, which is a timeless, all appropriate colour that will translate into all seasons.

Let fashion be fashion and lose control because nature knows best and she always delivers. People need only trust their senses and go with what feels right, because confidence is key, all else will follow.

-  Resene Captain Cook
-  Resene High Noon
-  Resene Lonestar
-  Resene Greenhouse
-  Resene Pursuit
-  Resene X Factor
-  Resene Galliano
-  Resene Stonehenge
-  Resene Leather

Resene Captain Cook
Michael Kors

Resene Lonestar
Oscar de la Renta

Resene Pursuit
Dolce & Gabbana

Resene Galliano
Jil Sander

Resene Leather
Sophie Theallet

Resene High Noon
Burberry

Resene Greenhouse
Reed-Krakoff

Resene X Factor
Marc Jacobs

Resene Stonehenge
Anima